"I have a fascination with World War 2, and with the 1940s in general. It was such an intense, scary time, yet as a nation we were still so innocent," says Nica Noelle. "I wanted to bring that tone to Prisoners of War - the juxtaposition of fear and terror but also a type of innocence and charm. It really came through with the phenomenal cast."

Noelle continues, "Rob Yaeger speaks fluent German and is a brilliant actor, so I wrote the part of the sadistic Nazi general especially for him. Ty Roderick has a timeless, damaged hero quality, so I knew he'd be perfect as the American soldier who risks his life to turn the tables on his captors. Tommy Defendi is absolutely breathtaking as the imprisoned soldier who suffers a psychotic break and turns on his young comrade, Ludo Sander. The guys really got into the spirit of their roles, probably because the set felt so authentic. All the props you see in the film are World War 2, American Army issued gear."

The year is 1942, and hot, young American soldiers are risking life and limb to fight against the threat of Nazi invasion. But when a sadistic German officer (Rob Yaeger) captures hot, angry private Ty Roderick, a different kind of power struggle begins. Watch gorgeous but deranged POW Tommy Defendi turn on his own young comrade (Ludo Sander) while cute blonde Private Wilde is forced to give up classified information - or else.
